The story begins with Wayne, a boy who is carrying a lot of worries around with him. He is warned about possible dangers so much that he needs a bag to pack all his worries into. Tired of how heavy the bag is becoming, he decides to dump the bag at the local billabong, a popular hang-out for all the town and which has many nooks and crannies to hide things in. Just as Wayne is about to do it, the bag seems to come alive, starting to shake and talk to him, which is the final encouragement he needs to dispose of the bag. He then rushes back to town and on the way bumps into Tilly who is on the way to hang out at the billabong – her favourite place to relax. Wayne warns Tilly to be careful but she can see no reason why, as the billabong has always been a safe and happy place. At the billabong, Tilly kicks back and relaxes with a book until she is interrupted by a strange little creature with a very bad temperament who proclaims that he is a bunyip and that the billabong is now his territory. Tilly is annoyed by the bunyip's carry on but not overly concerned.....
